The nature of early medieval Christian sites and buildings in Britain will be explored during this weekend. Starting with the evidence for Christianity in Roman Britain, speakers will explore the setting of worship in both Celtic and Anglo-Saxon worship of the British Isles from the sixth to the tenth centuries.

In addition to the buildings themselves, their sites, functions, decoration and furnishings will be discussed, as well as the kinds of artefacts associated with them. A picture will be built up of the kinds of worship, and setting for worship and religious expression, encountered by Christians in various parts of Britain.
